THE SENATORS AND THE RAILWAY TRACKS.

THE GRAND uprising of City Councils and of the people against the ill-considered legislation designed to postpone the removal of railroad tracks from Broad street has brought the State Senators from this city to their senses and impressed them with a lively sense of the importance of making an effort to free the tracks from the coils of the bill when it was originally introduced in the State Senate, the people of this great city had but a single champion. The men who were so ready as candidates to proffer lip-service to their constituents, speedily forgot their promises and their obligations when the projectors of the last outrage appeared upon the scene of action. Yesterday, however, was a day of penitence. Hensley, who, to his credit be it said, had opposed the obnoxious bill, offered a resolution to recall it from the House, when, as the telegraphic report informs us, "Senators McCandless, Nagle, and Connell expressed their desire to have the bill recalled and defeated on the ground that its real purport had not been apparent when it had originally been passed."

We fully concede that repentance is "better late than never," and that "while the lamp holds out to burn the vilest sinner may return," but if the maxim that a blunder is worse than a crime is ever true, it is applicable in this instance; and if we take the three Senators at their word, their confession that they did not understand the purport of legislation in which their constituents were deeply interested, reflects but little credit on their sagacity. Hereafter it may be set down as a rule that it is as easy to puzzle a Philadelphia Senator as it is reputed to be difficult to puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer. Messrs. McCandless, Nagle, and Connell have been caught on the horns of a dilemma, and they have preferred to meet their indignant constituents with the plea that they support laws which they do not understand, rather than with an attempt to justify their support of an unjustifiable measure. Davis, of the House, seems disposed to give ground, and as he had committed himself as the advocate of the bill, he successfully contended that the Senators should not be allowed to relieve themselves of the responsibility they had voluntarily assumed.

THE COMMUTATION OF SENTENCES. GOVERNOR GEARY, in his last annual message, referred to six criminals who were confined under sentence of death in the Philadelphia prison, but whose execution, in the judgment of himself or of his predecessors, was scarcely proper; and he stated that "it would be both just and merciful to give the Governor authority to commute the sentence of death in the above-named cases to imprisonment at labor, in the Penitentiary, for such a term of years as the ameliorating circumstances may seem to justify and demand." Similar recommendations had previously been made by other Governors, and it was natural that such an extension of authority should be asked for and granted. The Legislature, however, was too deeply interested in other matters to seriously consider this proposition until the friends of Gerald Eaton, as a last resort, concluded that if a law, conferring in general terms the powers referred to, were passed before the day fixed for his execution, his life could be saved. The appliances they brought to bear proved effective, and a law was sent to the Governor on Wednesday last, granting him not only the powers asked for in his last annual message, but the privilege of exercising similar authority in other similar cases. Singular to say, this act has been vetoed and the Legislature has been solemnly lectured for going a step beyond the strict letter of their instructions. They are now told that "there is a fitness in giving this additional discretion to the Governor," that "the law furnishes abundant security to criminals, as well as opportunities for new trials," that "the commutation is an exercise of judicial discretion," and that "it is unjust to the Executive to compel him to retry every case; it is unjust to the courts and juries to expose their solemn findings to such irresponsible re-examinations." All this reasoning may be very profound, but it is difficult to see why, if it was right to authorize the Governor to commute the sentences of Edward Ford, Patrick Finnegan, Newton Champion, Alfred Alexander, and Hester Vaughan, it was so dreadfully wrong to permit him to exercise similar powers in other cases. As the law now stands, no man can be hung until the Governor issues a warrant for his execution, and when he chooses to defer this task, from time to time, on account of extenuating circumstances, the continued imprisonment becomes a punishment which, as Governor Geary stated in his annual message, "with the additional embitterment constantly preying upon the mind that a death-warrant may at any moment be issued, is perhaps the severest that could be inflicted."

HON. LEONARD MYERS was yesterday declared entitled to the seat in the National House of Representatives from the Third Pennsylvania district, and Mr. John Moffet was accordingly ousted and Mr. Myers sworn in. This action of the House, after a careful investigation of the case by the Election Committee, effectually defeats the machinations of the Democratic managers, by which it was expected that the people of the Third district would be cheated out of their legally chosen Representative. No one really doubts that Mr. Myers did receive a majority of the legal votes cast, and it is gratifying to know that the enormous frauds practised by the Democracy were of no avail in this instance at least.

THE EXHIBITION AT EARLE'S GALLERIES. LAST EVENING a number of invited guests assembled at the galleries of Messrs. Earle & Sons, to view the collection of art works which they have just placed upon exhibition. This collection, the general characteristics of which we mentioned yesterday, is one of much interest, and it contains a number of important works which are well worthy of the attention of lovers of art. Bierstadt's "Mount Vesuvius in Eruption" was painted from sketches made on the spot during the height of the great eruption of last year. In the foreground of the picture are the rough, broken masses of lava, relics of former convulsions of the mountain. On the right is the cone of the crater, shooting forth flame, and from this flows away a de mass of smoke, lighted on one side by the red glare of the flame, and on the other by the silvery gleams of the moon. The artist's taste seems to have been principally to combine as many different efforts as possible, and to show the freight and moonlight in opposition to each other on the clouds and the snow-covered lava hills finely rendered. The picture, however, conveys no idea whatever of the grandeur of the eruption, and as a genuine work of art it is too sensational and tricky to be classed among the artist's best efforts. This picture is draped in the front gallery up stairs, and it is shown by gaslight, so as to bring out all the effects in the strongest manner.

"The Yosemite Valley" by Thomas Hill, is a large picture at about the same size of Bierstadt's work on the same subject. The general effect of the two pictures is much the same, but there is less glare about Mr. Hill's work, and it is better in tone and color. The point of view is taken from the opposite end of the valley to the one chosen by Mr. Bierstadt. "Wooded Wagon" by Constant Mayer, is a lady teaching a Sunday School class of ragged children. All the figures are admirably drawn and painted, the scenery of the picture is beautiful, and as a work of art it is superior to anything that this artist has yet produced, except it may be his "Convalescence." In addition to the three large works just mentioned, there are a number of new pictures by Philadelphia artists. Mr. Edward Moran contributes a spirited illustration of Longfellow's poem, "The Wreck of the Hesperus," which the artist entitled "On the Reef of Norman's Woe." Mr. James Hamilton has two characteristic pictures—"The Entry of the American Mail, Niagara," which resembles somewhat his large work on the same subject exhibited several years ago, but is more carefully painted; "Prometheus" represents the Titan chained to the rock, amid the crash of the elements, as he is represented in the grand finale of the tragedy of Æschylus. Mr. R. D. Lewis exhibits "Mora Castle and the Harbor of Havana," a picture somewhat out of his usual style, and "Aisle No. on the Mosque," "On the Wisconsin" is a painting of rare beauty, by W. T. Richards. Other works worthy of notice are "The Engagement between the Monitor and Merrimack," by Xenith Smith; "Challenging a Union Vote," by John Rogers; "A November Day on the Prairies," "Moonrise—Chicago Harbor," and on the Susquehanna, near Columbia," by W. H. Wilcox; "Autumnal Sunset," "View in Haddam, Conn.," by Isaac L. Williams; and contributions by Knight, Ferris, Mosler, Wood, and others. The crowded state of our columns will not permit us to refer to these in detail at present, and we therefore defer a discussion of their merits until a future time.

A very interesting feature of the collection is the exhibition of chronos and their originals side by side. The fidelity with which many of these works are imitated is remarkable. The exhibition is now open free to the public.

OPERA BOUFFE. A VERY successful season of grand opera is to be followed by a season of opera bouffe, just as the farce follows the tragedy. The attendance at the Academy during the performance of the last two weeks indicated very clearly that Offenbach's lively strains, and the comic singing and acting of the bouffe artists who have appeared during the past two winters at the Academy of Music, have not vitiated the public taste, or made our opera-goers insensible to the charms of "good" music. Indeed, a genuine lover of music will not allow his enjoyment to be disturbed by theories of any kind, but he will be equally ready to appreciate light or heavy music, comedy or tragedy, provided it is good of its kind, and the opera bouffe performances of next week will doubtless attract the same class of ladies and gentlemen assembled to hear the works of Mozart, Gounod, Donizetti, and Verdi interpreted by such artists as Miss Kellong, Madame La Grange, Miss McCulloch, Signor Ronconi, Signor Antonucci, and Signor Orlandini.

Mr. J. Grau will commence his season on next Wednesday under very favorable auspices. He will produce a number of works by Offenbach and other composers that have not been witnessed by our opera-goers, and he will introduce to us some artists who have won first-class reputations in other cities. It is promised that the various operas will be brought out in very handsome style, with magnificent scenery, costumes, and appointments, and that all the details which add so much to the effect of performances will be attended to in the most careful manner. The chorus will be unusually large and efficient, and, as an additional attraction, we are assured that he will present an array of beauty such as has never been seen before on the stage of the Academy. This will be an attraction indeed, for chorus singers are usually distinguished for anything but beauty. It has been the elegance and good taste with which the bouffe operas have been placed on the stage heretofore that have contributed more than any thing else to their success, and Mr. Grau promises to surpass all former efforts in this respect. In addition to the opera bouffe, our music-loving citizens are to be treated to another operatic novelty in the performance of the Philadelphia Opera Company. This company is organized for the purpose of encouraging and developing native talent, and they will give their first performance at the Amateur Drawing Room, on Seventh street, above Chesnut, on Wednesday evening, April 28. On this occasion Elieberg's comic opera "The Doctor of Alcantara" will be presented, with the following artists in the cast—Misses Klondike, Fredonia and Naomi Durang, Mr. George Bishop, and others. The orchestra will be under the direction of Mr. W. G. Dietrich. This enterprise is deserving of the encouragement of our citizens. It is promised that every care will be taken to produce the operas in the best style, and we hope that the performers will receive all the encouragement they deserve.

TWIN BROTHERS Are good things to have in a family of boys. They generally take about twice as much clothes as a boy wears, and don't twin. For the most part they look very much alike. It used to be esteemed a great calamity to a family when twins were introduced, but of late years, since ROCKHILL & WILSON have so powerfully reduced the expense of clothing boys, it costs about as much to clothe two boys as it used to cost to clothe one. Therefore it is quite an object to have a pair of twins in the family. Twins can wear each other's clothes, or their own, as they prefer. Sometimes it happens when a boy wears his twin's clothes are getting somewhat worn, the other twin runs a little earlier in the morning, and gets the best clothes. Twins can say each other's lessons at school, which is also a great convenience, as one lesson will do for a whole pair. No more at present on the subject of twins, except this one thought:—BRING ON YOUR TWINS! Present them at the door of the GREAT BROWN HALL, and they will be cordially treated, well fitted, and in every respect made to enjoy complete satisfaction whether they are of the same sex or not. Clothes for twins and for all other conditions of small boys and big men at that Mammoth Emporium, the Great Brown Stone Hall or
